THE PROUD PUPPY

WHEN Patrick Puppy went to the seashore for the very first time, all the big dogs laughed at him. First of all, he began digging a hole, the way dogs do when they're burying a bone. Immediately there was an angry yell from the lady who lay on the sand behind him . . .

"Nasty little puppy!" she screamed. "How dare you get sand all over me! Get off this beach if you don't know how to behave at beaches!"

Patrick Puppy slunk away from her with his tail between his legs, very embarrassed and bewildered. No sooner had this scene occurred than the other dogs had something else to laugh at . . .

"Bow wow wow!" yelped little Patrick Puppy. He was chasing the waves. But each time he chased one out, it curled up again and chased him in, crashing over him and getting him all wet and surprised. "Bow wow!" he yelped more loudly, but the waves kept turning suddenly and splashing onto him.

The older dogs laughed and laughed. "Poor Patrick!" they giggled. "Funny Patrick!"

Then the puppy saw somebody out in the water swimming. He decided to try it. But, of course, without any practice, he wasn't much good at it. He went under the water. He came up and gurgled. Down he went again. Up again. This time he screeched, "Help!"

A lifeguard had to run down from his lifeguard tower to save him. Patrick was brought up onto the boardwalk dripping wet and panting hard and loud like a locomotive.

The big dogs thought this was the funniest thing yet. "Ho ho ho!" they chuckled. "Ha ha ha!"

Patrick was mighty tired of being laughed at. The bigger dogs swam together, way far out over their heads where little puppies couldn't go. They made huge forts in the wet sand and wouldn't let Patrick help them. He was so bored that finally he began picking up stuff off the beach. He picked things up in his teeth—pieces of paper, old Dixie cups, bottles, cans —and brought them up to the trash can next to the boardwalk. It wasn't much fun but at least it was better than getting in trouble, and being laughed at. Patrick had been cleaning up the beach this way for an hour when a voice said, "This is a swell favor you're doing for us. If you hadn't cleaned the beach, we would've had to do it. Thanks a lot, pup."

It was the Chief Lifeguard who was speaking, patting Patrick's head. The little puppy wagged his tail. He barked his friendliest bark. All the big dogs had come around to see why an important person like the Chief Lifeguard would bother paying attention to funny little Patrick. They heard the lifeguard say, "Patrick, from now on you'll be our beach mascot. You've done us a favor; now we'll do you one. Come on. Want to see how the sea looks from way up on the Lifeguard Tower?"

All the big dogs watched jealously as Patrick was picked up and carried to the top of the lifeguard tower. And there he sat, each day from then on, way high up like a furry little king . . . yes, like The King of the Beach, who nobody ever laughed at anymore.
